DISCOVERY OF CHAMPAGNE.—In 1688 a certain monk, named Perignon, was made cellarer of the Benedictine Abbey of Haut Villers, a little hamlet on the banks of the Marne, about five miles from Epernay, who was a perfect godsend to the wine-bibbing world. He was the first to marry the produce of one vineyard to that of another, to find out that a white wine which would keep could be made from the blackest grapes instead of degenerating like that obtained from the white grapes, and to substitute cork as a bottle stop-per for flax dipped in oil. Just at the close of the seventeenth century he achieved his final triumph of producing effervescent champagne. Why it sparkled he knew not, but the secret spread over the country, until 1878 the official return of the manufacturers' stocks in the champagne district, as given by the chamber of commerce at Rheims, is 70,183,363 bottles. In England the taste for dry champagne became gen-eral nearly a hundred years ago, and the demand was then, as now, for Sillery. Russia takes it sweet and strong, and the French and Germans like a sweet, light wine.
